1. Content Design

1.1 IN THE LARGE: C-IDM schema

The C-IDM (Conceptual-Interactive Design Model) schema illustrated here represents the foundational structure and relationships within our website designed for a non-profit center. This schema serves as a blueprint for the website's architecture, providing a clear visualization of the key components and their interconnections. The design follows IDM notation, which ensures that the website's elements are logically organized and easily navigable.

THE RELEVANT RELATIONSHIPS ARE:

- A PROJECT or SERVICE is under the responsibility of exactly one PERSON

3. Database Design

This chapter presents the database design for the website to be implemented. The design is represented through an Entity-Relationship diagram. Additionally, a tabular representation of the logical model will be provided.

3.1 E-R diagram

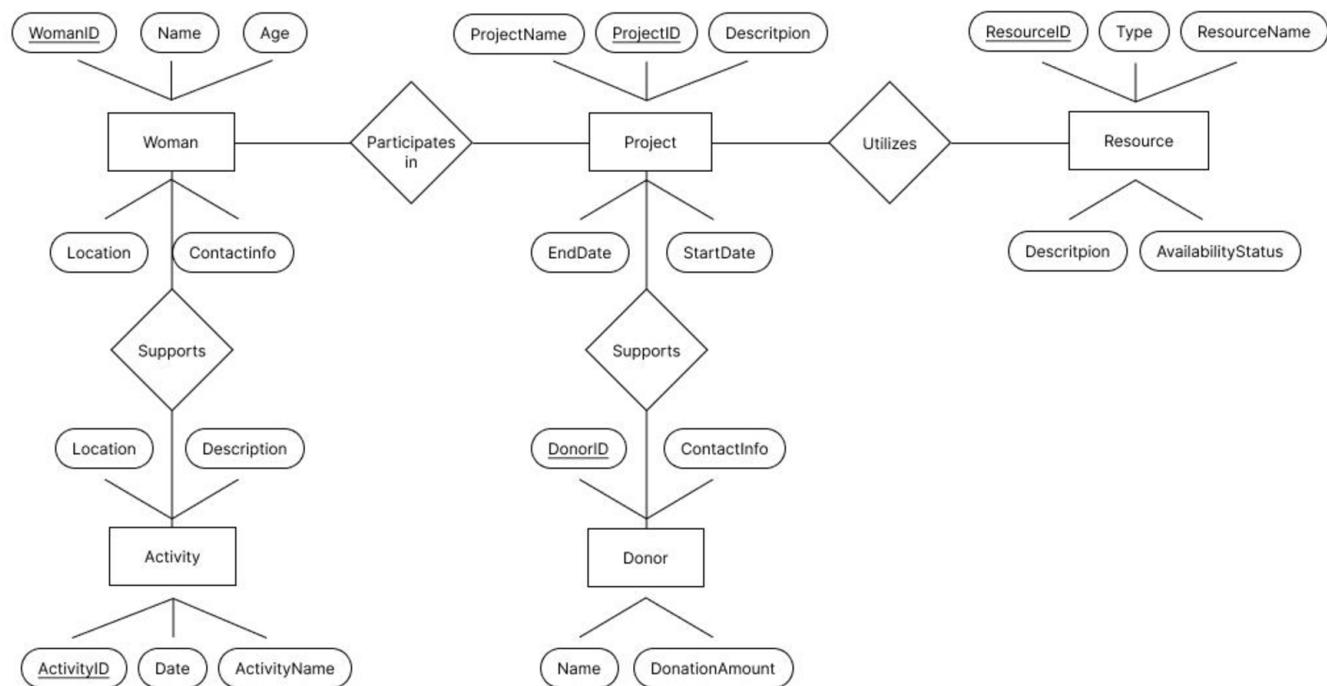

The ER diagram for the "EmpowerHer" initiative outlines the primary entities, attributes, and relationships in the database. The main entities include Woman, Project, Resource, Donor, and Activity. Each entity has a unique identifier and relevant attributes:

- Woman: WomanID (PK), Name, Age, Location, ContactInfo
- Project: ProjectID (PK), ProjectName, Description, StartDate, EndDate
- Resource: ResourceID (PK), ResourceName, Type, Description, AvailabilityStatus
- Donor: DonorID (PK), Name, ContactInfo, DonationAmount
- Activity: ActivityID (PK), ActivityName, Date, Location, Description

Key relationships include:

- Woman "participates in" Project
- Project "utilizes" Resource
- Donor "supports" Project
- Woman "attends" Activity

This diagram ensures a clear structure and efficient organization for managing data within the initiative.

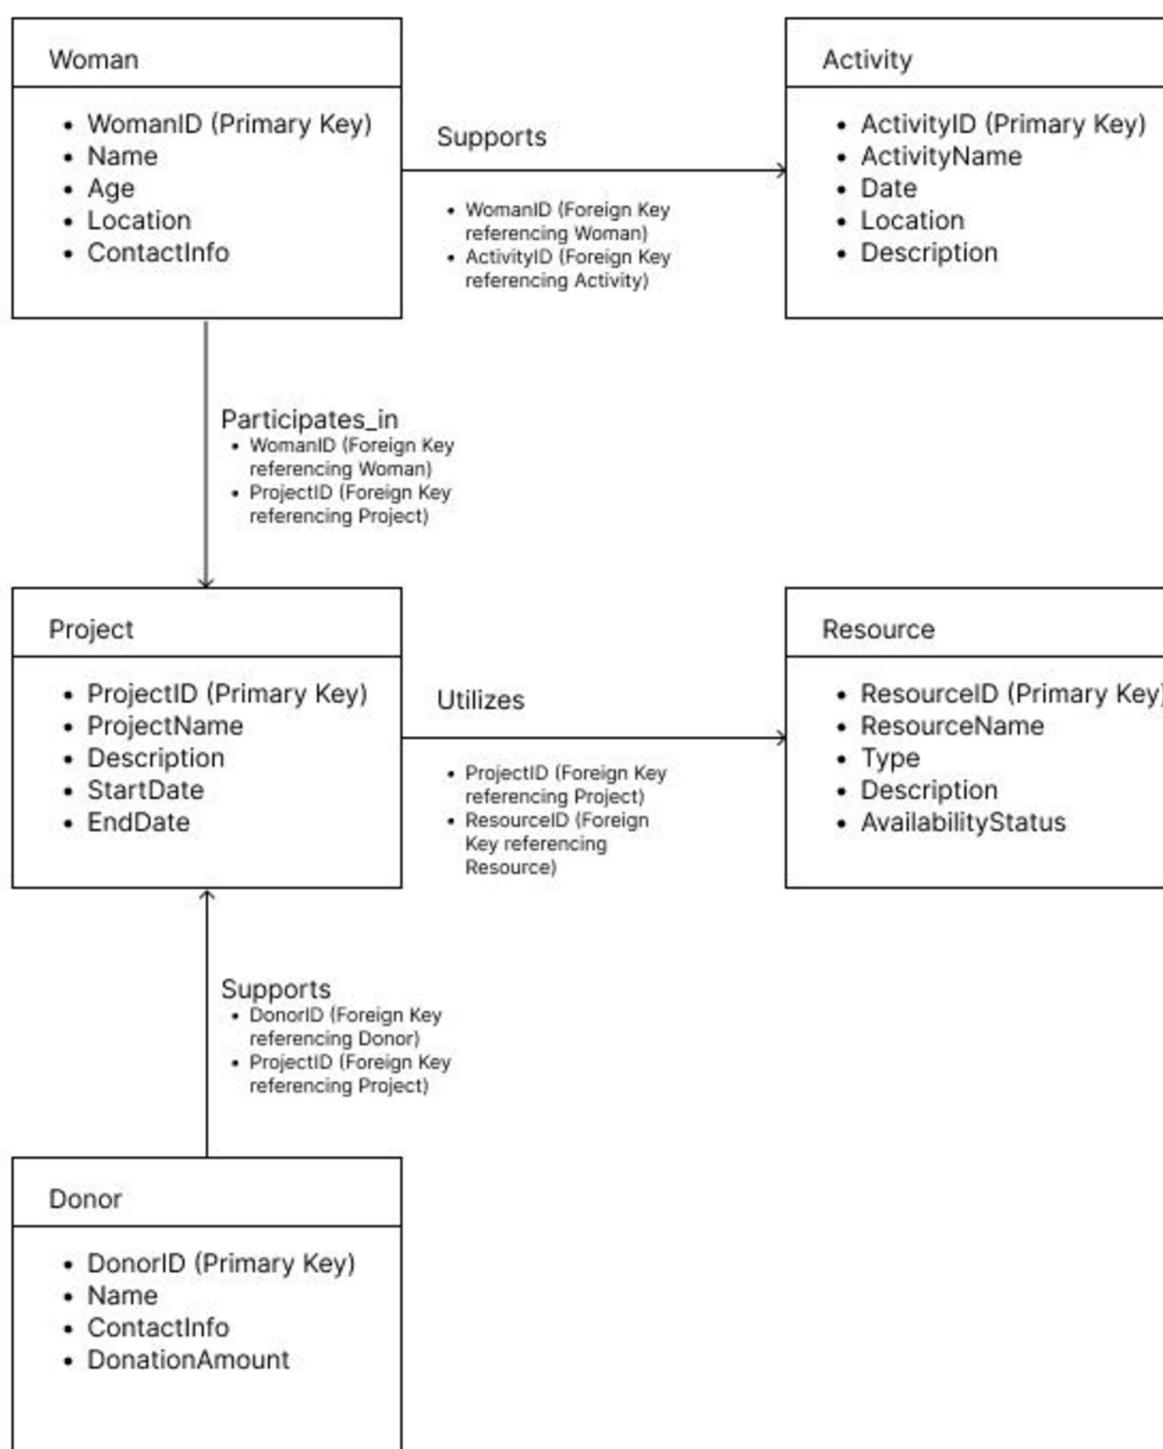

3.2 Relational Schema

This relational database model consists of six main tables: Woman, Activity, Project, Resource, Donor, and their relationships through junction tables.

- Woman: Contains WomanID (Primary Key), Name, Age, Location, and ContactInfo. Women participate in Projects and support Activities.
- Activity: Contains ActivityID (Primary Key), ActivityName, Date, Location, and Description. Activities are supported by Women.
- Project: Contains ProjectID (Primary Key), ProjectName, Description, StartDate, and EndDate. Projects involve Women, utilize Resources, and receive support from Donors.
- Resource: Contains ResourceID (Primary Key), ResourceName, Type, Description, and AvailabilityStatus. Resources are utilized by Projects.
- Donor: Contains DonorID (Primary Key), Name, ContactInfo, and DonationAmount. Donors support Projects.

Junction tables (Supports, Participates_in, Utilizes) manage the relationships between these entities, ensuring organized and efficient data tracking.
